

The Philosophical Quarterly invites submissions for its 2010 international prize essay competition, the topic of which is 'The Emotions'.

Emotions occupy a central place in our lives, and are increasingly the object of philosophical attention. Essays are invited that consider philosophical issues about the emotions. Topics might include the nature of emotion, the relations between emotion, value and reason, the role of perception in emotional experience, the intentionality of emotion, the importance of emotion in theoretical and practical reasoning, and philosophical implications of empirical work on emotions.

Essays should not be longer than 8,000 words, and should be typed in double spacing. Electronic submission is preferred and contributions may be sent as email attachments to pq@st-andrews.ac.uk. Most formats are acceptable, but PDF is preferred.

Alternatively, non-electronic submissions may be sent to the address below. Three copies of each essay are required and these will not be returned. All entries will be regarded as submissions for publication in The Philosophical Quarterly, and both winning and non-winning entries judged to be of sufficient quality will be published. The closing date for submissions is 1st November 2010.

All submissions should be headed 'The Emotions' Prize Essay Competition (with the author's name and address given in a covering letter, but NOT in the essay itself) and sent to:

The Journal Manager
The Philosophical Quarterly
University of St Andrews
KY16 9AL
Scotland,
UK