4. Principal's Address

Dr Brian Lang addressed the Council. The University had just completed another successful week of Graduations. The weather had been unpredictable but all the events had run smoothly and some of the finest graduation addresses had been delivered.

The University continued to flourish but critical times were ahead with the results of the RAE due in December 2008. There were significant financial and reputational implications riding on the results.

The University’s financial position remained stable with no cause for immediate concern and no Scottish university, to date, in serious financial crisis.

The preparation of the new Strategic Plan was almost complete, having involved a process of consultation and involvement by members of staff across the institution. The plan would provide the basis for significant building plans; the principal commitments being to the building of a new facility for Medicine at the North Haugh and the redevelopment of the main library. These projects alone were taking the university into a new league in terms of fundraising.

Planning for the 600th Anniversary celebrations was well underway. The Anniversary events would span the period 2011 to 2013; 1411 having been the year teaching had commenced and 1413 the year the Pope had sealed the Bull.

The Principal clarified the position regarding the growth in student numbers, both actual and potential. The University remained committed to keeping the overall population in the region of 7,000 students. However it was important to keep growing the business; therefore the growth had to be smart through partnership arrangements, joint degrees and collaborate programmes. These arrangements reduced the impact of the number of students within the town and the direct support required for them.

5. New Medical School Building

The Dean of Medicine addressed Council, outlining the vision for a new School of Medicine and Interdisciplinary Medical Research Institute to be built at the North Haugh. This was the largest single capital development in the history of the University. Fundraising had commenced in earnest and had, to date, proceeded well with around £8 million having been secured to date.

Work had commenced on site at the beginning of June and if all progressed to plan the building would be completed for the student intake in September 2010. Student numbers in Medicine would rise to coincide with the availability of the new building but this was planned within the overall student population for the University.

Key features of the new building included the facilities for joint research with a range of science disciplines, flexible teaching space and specialist laboratories for teaching and research. Collaborative research, particularly in medical photonics and virology, would be enhanced through the new facilities.

Plans for the current Bute building had yet to be finalised. There was potential within the space vacated by Medicine for more teaching and research facilities for the Faculty of Arts or potential conversion to residential space.

6. Other Business
