Planned timetable: 11.00 am - 1.00 pm Thu.

The aim of this inter-disciplinary module is to introduce students to the core concepts and issues that constitute the 'traditional' security agenda in the past, present and future. By updating the 'traditional' security agenda for the twenty-first century, it challenges conventional wisdom and assumptions that international security is now dominated by 'new' security issues such as terrorism and infectious diseases. Various historical and theoretical debates on the persistence and continued relevance of 'old' security concepts in the twenty-first century are examined such as the Balance of Power, the Security Dilemma, Arms Races and geo-political competition.

Planned timetable: 10.00 am - 12.00 noon Tue.

This module provides a political economy perspective on conflict in a developing economy, introducing concepts and theoretical approaches of political economy and their application to situations involving conflict and violence. Economic arguments for a 'resource curse' and the explanatory binary of 'greed versus grievance' are interrogated and challenged for the absence of political, hence political economic, contextualisation and analysis. The complex network of commodities and goods traded between developed and developing economies are explored through a series of case studies and the increased securitisation of development in the twenty-first century is examined.

This module provides a comparative analysis of the emergence of India and China as great powers within the international system. Focusing upon the factors integral to such a phenomenon (from both theoretical and historical perspectives), students will build up a comprehensive understanding of these two states’ past, contemporary and future global significance. After an assessment of differing orientating concepts from IR theory, the module will evaluate key factors concerning how India and China measure up as great powers, leading to an evaluation of the future challenges these two states will ace as they define their emergent roles in the twenty-first century.

The aim of this module is to discuss the major shifts and developments in modern strategic thought and practice, as well as some of the powerful factors that determined and are still determining military possibilities in the modern era. We will examine historical case studies and the reasons for changes in the use and application of military force along two axes: chronological and thematic. Starting from the Second World War, we will analyse the evolution of strategic thought and practice in response to political, technological, cultural and other developments. The combination of historical analysis and thematic issues will allow students to develop a more comprehensive picture of the evolution of strategy as well as better understanding and informed critique of major strategic trends and challenges of recent and contemporary history.

This module focuses on the treatment of war in art broadly conceived: photography, films, paintings. It explores the ways in which these works contribute to our understanding of war, and by extension our understanding of international relations. Can works of art – works of the imagination – reach parts that other works cannot reach? How? What effect do they have? What difference do they make? The module will be run as a weekly seminar, with considerable scope for student-led exploration and discussion.

Planned timetable: 11.00 am - 1.00 pm Wed.

This module discusses philosophical reflections on the idea of world order through a study of certain key texts of political philosophy, selected each year from an approved list. This will consist of some Roman and Greek texts (e.g. Thucydides, History, Lucretius De Rerum Natura) some medieval Christian texts (e.g. Augustine, De Civitate Dei, Dante, De Monarchia), some modern texts (e.g. Hegel, Philosophy of History) and some twentieth century texts (for example, Voegelin, Order and History, Santayana, Dominations and Powers). These texts would be bracketed by a general methodological and philosophical introduction and a concluding discussion of the implications of these readings.

IR5406 Theories of Friendship and Enmity

SCOTCAT Credits: 30  SCQF Level 11  Semester: 2

Planned timetable: 10.00 am - 12.00 noon Thu.

This module addresses a number of classical texts in western political thought on the themes of friendship and enmity. Its main aim is to alert students to the link between different notions of enmity and friendship on the one hand and different understanding of the political on the other hand. Relevant passages from Plato's Republic, Aristotle's Politics and Ethics, Machiavelli's Prince and Discourses, Hobbes' Leviathan and Behemoth, Kant's Perpetual Peace, Schmitt's Concept of the Political and The Crisis of Parliamentary Democracy and Derrida's Politics of Friendship will be analysed in some depth with the aim to single out their assumptions about human nature and to derive their implications for politics.

IR5411 African Political Thought

SCOTCAT Credits: 30  SCQF Level 11  Semester: 2

Planned timetable: 2.00 pm - 4.00 pm Thu.

The principal themes of African political thought are studied and analysed in the light of their socio-economic context and intellectual origins. The module aims to examine the main ideas of the great Africanist thinkers e.g. Du Bois, Garvey, Fanon, Nyerere, Nkrumah, Senghor, Cabral, Biko etc and discuss how these intellectuals reacted to the internal and external variables to evolve a body of ideas which together could be viewed as African political thought.

This module focuses on major themes in the study of international security and applies them to the study of the Middle East and Central Asia. These addressed may include war and political violence, nationalism and ethnic conflict, arms control and nuclear proliferation, democratisation and theories of globalisation as they impact on the region (e.g. clash of civilisations).

Dramatically and unexpectedly, Central Asia was thrust to independence in 1991. Of all the Soviet republics, the five of Central Asia - Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan - had been the largest net recipients of Soviet aid, had benefited most economically from the Soviet Union and had thus been the most reluctant to break from the Soviet empire. Once the path of independence was followed, each of these five states faced considerable ethnic, state, economic, social and foreign policy challenges. This course aims to analyse these nation- and state-building agendas, seeking to address critically some of the now widely held assumptions about this post-Soviet area. Moreover, located in one of the world’s most strategic zones, between Russia, China and a troubled Middle East, Central Asia relies on its substantial human and natural resources in the renegotiation of its geopolitical status.

This module centralises conflict in the Middle East as a broad area of inquiry and investigates the political, economic and social conditions generating conflict both within and between states in the region. The subjects covered include the emergence and meaning of the “nation-state” in the Middle East; the ideological relationship between Islam and Pan-Arabism; the latter and state nationalism; state-civil society relations, as well as inter-ethnic and gender related conflicts. The module also covers all aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

How do legal institutional institutions and ideas shape and help change states and their peoples across the Middle East? What are the origins and sources of these norms and to what extent are they unique to the region? This module applies a critical legal lens to a range of national and international legal cases enabling students to gain knowledge of specific legal regimes as well as familiarity with general academic debates about the role of law in affecting social change.

This module examines one of the world’s most fascinating yet least understood regions. The Caucasus are rich in history, languages and culture, having developed as the crossroads between three great empires, the Ottoman, Persian and Russian. It is also a region riven by conflicts and remains of geopolitical importance to world powers, not least for reasons of energy. The module gives particular attention to the sources of the many wars in the Caucasus; the failed efforts to solve them; and the divergent interests there of such actors as Turkey, Iran, Russia, the United States and the EU.

This module examines the dynamics and outcomes of social protests in the authoritarian regimes of North African region in the post-colonial period. It aims to describe the structural and inter-subjective features of democratic, authoritarian and revolutionary change, and to locate them in vis-à-vis the evolution of regional politics and of the international system. It describes the specificities and dilemmas of authoritarian and democratic governance in each polity with a particular focus on the developments of the last decade (post-2001). It examines in details the relationship between the state and social movements within the larger context of processes of political and economic liberalisation as well as regional (north-south) integration.

Since the end of the Cold War, the predominant forms through which conflict is waged have transformed, precipitating profound changes both in the nature of international and intra-State conflict and in those national and international efforts to resolve and transform conflict.

Understanding the nature of conflict and collective responses to it provides vital insights into the changing nature of the international system and into the emergence and development of those new (non-State) actors that have begun increasingly to influence and redefine it.

This module will analyse how and why the principal theoretical frameworks and practices employed to comprehend conflict, violence and peace building have evolved over the last decades, situating this analysis within a series of key case studies.

This module critically evaluates constructions of gender, and of the child, and how such constructions relate to the roles played by men, women and children during wartime, and in post-conflict processes. The module begins with an historical and philosophical overview of the subject area, before examining contemporary peace and conflict discourses. Throughout the module, attention will be paid to a range of conflicts, past and present; and to post-conflict processes and lessons that these may offer in examining issues of gender and of generation.

Planned timetable: 2.00 - 4.00 pm Thu.

This module aims to be a systematic study of patterns of conflict in Africa and security concerns. The module will survey the literature on conflict and security as it pertains to the continent in order to gain an understanding of the competing contentions on the causes and resolution of conflict in Africa. The main question the module asks is: why does Africa appear to be so susceptible to conflicts? Although simple in appearance, the question is still the subject of a great deal of conjecture and debate. Thus, the aim of the module is to approximate reasonable and plausible answers to the question of what drives conflict in Africa. We hope to arrive at a better understanding of the complex and intricate dimensions of African wars, primarily through the rigorous study of selected case studies. In addition, we aim to take a look at broader security concerns that impact upon the lives of ordinary Africans.

Programme module type: Optional for the Peace and Conflict Studies Postgraduate Taught Programme.

Planned timetable: 11.00 am Wed 10.00 am – 11.00 am Mon

This module introduces students to a case study methodology of civil war, conflict, genocide and post-conflict transformation. Students will develop an understanding of the history and background to civil war and genocide in Rwanda; the legal requirements and relevant case law for the crime of genocide; models of policing and punishment in contemporary post-conflict situations; and approaches to transitional justice, security sector reform, governance, and civil society in the aftermath of genocide. The field trip will facilitate in-depth discussions with local experts and key institutions, visits to genocide memorial sites and national museums, and the opportunity to monitor ongoing trials of individuals accused of crimes of genocide who have been transferred to Rwanda by the ICTR and beyond. This module will encourage students to evaluate and critically analyse different arguments, evidence, and accounts of reconciliation and reconstruction in the aftermath of genocide.

Programme module type: Optional for Peace and Conflict Studies Taught Postgraduate Programme and other Taught Postgraduate Programmes within the School.

Learning and teaching methods and delivery: Weekly contact: 2-hour seminar.

This module is the first of four of an elearning Postgraduate Diploma in Terrorism Studies, and is designed to present core conceptual issues. These issues will include: Terrorism as a field of study - emergence and evolution; Definitional, conceptual, typological and theoretical issues; History of Terrorism; Ideology, Religion and Terrorism; Terrorist Organisations and Campaigns - stand-alone terrorism and terrorism combined with guerrilla warfare and political party work; Terrorism and Democracy - legal and human rights issues; Terrorism and Repression - counter-insurgency and counter-terror; Terrorism and Domestic and International Conflict - asymmetric warfare and humanitarian issues; Terrorism and Crime - linkage and law enforcement issues; Terrorism and Communication - propaganda and psychological warfare. We will cover three structures in relation to these concepts. Inside terrorist organisations and their support groups: Profiles of the most active terrorist groups - case studies. The structure of the international system and international counter-terrorist measures. Victims of terrorism and their national and transnational support organisations.

This module will present appropriate research methods to enable students to critically understand the professional literature, and to lay the foundations to enable students to engage in further research. The broad aim of this module is to provide students with sufficient research skills to identify, read and understand professional literature, and to undertake their own research activities. It will introduce critical elements of research methodology, introduce and develop skills in qualitative and quantitative research methodologies, describe and illustrate literature and documentation search and retrieval strategies, and provide an introduction to the role of the intelligence analyst as a practical example.

The aim of this module is to develop knowledge and understanding of the radicalisation process and responses to it. A critical feature of this module will be a focus on data-driven research in providing the evidence with which we can build a clearer picture of the complex process of becoming involved, remaining involved, and leaving behind involvement in terrorism. The implications of these issues for the development and assessment of counterterrorism initiatives will be presented.

Increasingly, terrorism and political violence is coming to be seen in the wider theoretical context of political collective action, social movement theory and ‘contentious politics’, a process which has been assisted on the one hand by this field’s own growing interest in transnational activism, and recently by growing interest in civil resistance as a neglected area in the study of insurgency within the framework of conflict studies and IR. This module will address such issues as: What does it mean to take a ‘political collective action’ approach to terrorism? Social movement theory and terrorism; Terrorism and high-risk activism: understanding recruitment and mobilisation; Terrorism and the Collective Action Repertoire; New Social Movements, New Terrorism? Terrorism in the Context of Transnational Activism.
