The module examines the development of history-writing and historical research since the Enlightenment, and the emergence of fields, trends and new approaches in current historiography. It brings together material from a range of historical approaches in order to provide a strong introduction to history and historiography at postgraduate level. Its combination of substantive and historiographical material enables the module to be used as a free-standing guide for those humanities students who are not based in History but who wish to take an elective module in the subject.

Anti-requisite(s) You cannot take this module if you take MO5601

Learning and teaching methods of delivery: Weekly contact: 1.5-hour seminar

Assessment pattern: Coursework = 100%

Re-assessment pattern: "New coursework: 3,000-word essay"

This core module for the MLitt in Transnational and Spatial History offers a strong foundation in the major approaches to comparative and transnational history as well as the emerging field of spatial history. This module introduces the origins of these new ways of looking at the past, as well as some of the major methodological challenges faced. The focus then shifts to consider transnational agents, networks, and new approaches to doing history between the micro and macro scales.

This module studies environmental history over the past two centuries in an international context. It examines attitudes to nature and animals, species history (extinctions and introductions), national parks and nature reserves, the history of environmentalism and nature conservation, the history of countryside recreation and tourism, and the history of current problems such as pollution and pesticide use. It will draw on examples taken from the USA, southern Africa, Australasia and Great Britain.

In the early twenty-first century, the fate of 'civilisation' seems caught between the inevitability of progress and the unavoidability of collapse. Increasingly, this fate has been tied to human interaction with the non-human natural world. This module offers helpful historical insight into the existential crises precipitated by human interaction with the natural world. But both history and evolution can be characterised as combinations of gradual and sudden change. Through the study of past environmental disasters, this module seeks to understand historical continuities and discontinuities. Bookended by the Lisbon earthquake of 1755 and Hurricane Katrina of 2005, the module explores the nature of 'natural' disasters; and the social and cultural factors that shaped and framed them. Moreover, it considers the ways in which an increasingly industrial, urban, and 'global' world may have generated distinctly 'modern' risks.

Environmental history is the study of human interaction with the natural world through time. Prior to the nineteenth century, nature was seen as an integral part of history. Similarly, this module encourages students to view nature not as a static backdrop, but as a vital element of history. Focusing principally upon Britain and North America from the eighteenth century to present, this module explores the history of human interaction with the natural world. It seeks to understand how politics and religious beliefs have influenced answers to persistent questions - such as, How old is the earth? What is an animal? What is a human? What is life? Moreover, the complex mixture of global exploration and trade, agricultural and industrial innovation, and burgeoning population will be assessed in relation to concerns over the degradation of the environment.

Before they are members of political and religious groupings, humans are biological entities. As such, throughout history humans have had to devise complex strategies to cope with fundamental biological factors. Focusing primarily upon Anglo-American context, this module examines the manner in which sickness and death have shaped human history - both biologically and culturally - over the past 500 years. Consideration of patients’ and practitioners' expectations, and of the changing means of cure, treatment, and care, encourages students to appreciate changing attitudes to health, hygiene, healing and illness within the social history of medicine. Moreover, through an examination of medical practitioners, hospitals, quarantine, inoculation, imperialism, urbanisations, and industrialisation, students will gain an appreciation of the historical relationships between environment and disease.

This module will equip MLitt students with skills necessary for historical research in the twenty-first century. Tailored specifically for students studying transnational, global and spatial history, the course will lead to the acquisition and development of skills in the digital humanities, and/or skills required for using specific historical sources. Students select two mini-modules on GIS map-making and one on databases and network analysis. The course is distinctive in that it seeks to foster multi-disciplinary expertise among history students - with the aim of developing innovative approaches to the sub-disciplines of transnational, global and spatial history.

Learning and teaching methods of delivery: Weekly contact: 7 x 2-hour seminars and 4 x 2-hour practical classes over the semester.

Assessment pattern: Coursework = 100%

This module offers a directed reading project designed to encourage the development of skills of historical analysis through concentrated study of a topic chosen by the student. The project offers the student the opportunity to develop skills of research, analysis and presentation prior to the dissertation. As such, it will serve as a useful transition between the more structured teaching which characterises undergraduate work and the independence of postgraduate dissertations. The project will generally take the form of a bibliographical essay or primary research on a narrowly defined topic, but the guidelines are sufficiently flexible to accommodate new developments in learning and information dissemination.

Perceptions of Central and Eastern Europe are as diverse as the ethic and cultural characteristics of the region itself, and have undergone significant transformation since the emergence of modern nationalism in the mid-nineteenth century. As the Mitteleuropa of German imperial aspirations gave way to the successor states of the Versailles settlement, then to Soviet-dominated Eastern Europe in a polarised Cold War continent, and, most recently, to the post-Communist return to Europe, the correspondingly evolving views from the periphery, from Germany and Russian, and from within the region itself offer a rich and challenging subject for advanced historical study.

Science and technology are key elements of modernity, and, of course, they have a history. This module will introduce students to core themes in the history of science from the Scientific Revolution onwards. Students will read a mixture of primary and secondary sources, and will be challenged to think about changes over time in such issues as: the definition and cultural status of 'science'; the status and role of its practitioners; the motivations for the pursuit of natural knowledge; the methods employed for making and communicating knowledge; and the spaces and sites of knowledge production and communication. Sessions will usually be co-taught by members of staff who bring different perspectives, cases and period-expertise to the discussion.
