This module will address a variety of themes within Christian theology. Each theme will be approached with a view to its biblical roots and historical development, its critical reception and restatement in the modern period, and its significance for contemporary theological reflection. Themes covered will include: The problem of 'God' in the modern world; who is Jesus Christ and what difference does it make?; Trinity, Spirit and community; Diagnosis and cure - models for salvation; Beginnings and endings - the origin and destiny of the world. Through consideration of these themes students will also be introduced to several key figures in the history of theology.

This module is an introduction to the life, literature and religion of Ancient Israel. It will in particular consider the main literary types of the Old Testament literature, both in order to familiarise students with the traditions used in the Old Testament and to demonstrate how this literature was shaped by religious, social and historical factors. The class will also consider how it came to form the traditional canon of the Hebrew Bible.

This module constitutes the first of a two-module New Testament Greek sequence. It introduces the first half of the essential grammar, morphology, and vocabulary of New Testament Greek. Upon the completion of this module, the student will have acquired an understanding of the Noun and Indicative Verb systems of Koine Greek. The student will be prepared for DI2201 New Testament Greek 2, which will cover the remainder of grammar. Upon completion of the entire course of NT Greek grammar, the student will be able to analyse the Greek New Testament, as well as other Koine literature of the period.

| Anti-requisite(s): | You cannot take this module if you take GK1001 or take GK1002 |

This module aims to introduce students to New Testament studies in general and to Gospel studies in particular. The general introduction will include consideration of the historical contexts of the New Testament texts, including political, socio-economic and religious factors within the Greco-Roman world and Early Judaism. The Gospels will then be studied with a view to determining the particular interests of their authors, and with a view to assessing their portraits of Jesus in relation to the historical Jesus.

Practical Theology and Christian Ethics are two disciplines within theology, each with distinctive approaches to critiquing people's actions and proposing enhanced practice. One half of this module introduces students to the work of a number of practical theologians so that they may gain methodological and conceptual tools for studying how Christian faith is practised - within and beyond the Church in fields as diverse as disability, cities, gender, and congregations. The other half introduces key concepts from the history of Christian Ethics, such as natural law, divine command, virtue ethics, the relation of scripture to ethics, and political theology.

This module continues the study of the Old Testament in DI1003, and is an introduction to the literature and theology of the period of Israel’s history from exile to the consolidation of the canon. Prophecy, wisdom, psalms, apocalyptic writings, and the earliest forms of inner-biblical exegesis are studied. Attention is given to the final shaping of Israel’s sacred texts. The important events from exile to Qumran are illustrated in relationship to the biblical literature.

This module examines the developing theology of the New Testament, paying particular attention to the issue of unity and diversity, and to the themes of Christology and soteriology. Given the importance of Paul to the development of early Christianity, a significant proportion of the module is devoted to studying his writings and those traditionally understood to be Pauline. The distinctive contributions of other New Testament writings will then be examined, as the coherence of early Christian theology is considered.

Academic year: 2019/0

Planned timetable: 2.00 pm Mon, Tue, Thu

This module will explore key themes in the organisation, practice and beliefs of the early and medieval church, focusing mostly on the period from the first to the ninth centuries. Among the topics covered in the first part of the module will be the early church's encounter with the Roman empire, martyrdom, debates over truth, orthodoxy and heresy, the impact of Constantine's conversion and the relationship between paganism and Christianity. The later part of the module covers the coming of Christianity to the British Isles, and especially Scotland, and themes such as the cult of saints, monasticism, pastoral care, worship and pilgrimage. Weekly seminars will involve engagement with key primary texts from the period.

Planned timetable: Require an hourly lecture slot for Monday, Tuesday and Thursday.

Although often phrased in philosophical language, the question of why a perfectly good and all-powerful God permits suffering is one of the perennial questions for all aspect of Christian thought. This module explores different ways of asking this question in conjunction with scientific research, focusing, therefore, on specific and troubling aspects of the natural world and human experience. The various types of evil discussed are paired with different responses from within Christian theology, with a particular focus on Christology, in order to evaluate the severity of the problem of evil for Christianity.

Learning and teaching methods of delivery:

This module examines the intersections between science, theology, and the arts. It will consider the role of the imagination in how science and theology are engaged in past and contemporary popular culture. This module is organized around how the arts express and reconfigure core tensions in the relationship between scientific and theological ideas about what it means to be human. The range of art forms examined may include science-fiction, the Gothic, film, television, poetry and theatre.
