The School of Classics, University of St Andrews and the Museum Collections Unit within the University are offering practical archaeology sessions for students in primary and secondary schools in Fife and Tayside.

Different types of workshops are available including handling sessions of the Cypriot Pottery collection and more structured workshops on a series of topics (such as excavation and finds).

Handling sessions are available throughout the academic year. For more information and to organise a visit please contact Dr Rebecca Sweetman (rs43@st-andrews.ac.uk). If you cannot come to St Andrews with your group a member of staff may be available to come to your class to chat generally about archaeology or more specifically on topics such as the Roman army.

The Museum Collections Unit has organised a series of workshops for primary schools. They will take place every Thursday and Friday morning in November at MUSA (Museum of the University of St Andrews). For more information and to make a booking please contact museumlearning@st-andrews.ac.uk or call 01334 461663/461660.
